

Advocacy Skills for Teen and Young Adults

Learning how to advocate for oneself is an important part of transitioning to adulthood and can be challenging for any teen / young adult. Those with learning, social or intellectual disabilities often experience additional challenges in developing the confidence and skills to voice their needs. This workshop will focus on strategies to help teens and young adults develop self-advocacy skills across different life domains, including school, work, relationships and medical care.